

W. P. PATTERSON TELLS WHAT ASSOCIATION DID

Former President of Virginia Game Protective Association Replies to Mr. Hart.

ADVOCATED NEW LAW'S PASSAGE

Issues Statement in Which He Says All Credit Is Not Due to Audubon Society of Virginia, and Explains His Reasons.

W. P. Patterson, former president of the Virginia Game and Game Fish Protective Association, takes cognizance of an interview by M. D. Hart, president of the Audubon Society of Virginia, which was published in The Times-Dispatch last Sunday, by giving out the following statement:

Some of these statements made by Mr. Hart are so unjust to the Virginia Game Association, to the editors and its members of 1914, and to the gentlemen who have almost their undivided interest to the passage of the Hart-White game bill, that I feel it is incumbent upon me to take positive exception to some of the statements made by Mr. Hart.

Mr. Hart states that the Audubon Society of Virginia conducted an educational campaign in the hills covered in the past, and that the right was practically waged alone by the Audubon Society.

Tells What Association Did.

"An examination of the books of the Virginia Game Association will show that it spent between $1,200 and $1,500 of its own funds on this particular campaign of 1914, and that the association mailed to its members, and to the public, a large number of copies of the Virginia Game Protective Association's literature, and that the association obtained, directly through its own efforts, the moral and financial support of the great national game protective and conservation associations of the United States.

I make the following statements without reservation:

"That the Virginia Game Protective Association spent more than double the amount of money on the 1914 game protective campaign than did the Audubon Society of Virginia.

"That the officers and members of the Virginia Game Protective Association, as a whole, gave more time and effort to this campaign than did the Audubon Society as a whole.

"That the Virginia Game Protective Association mailed out five times the amount of literature than did the Audubon Society.

"That the Virginia Game Protective Association secured through its individual efforts the presence of the most prominent game conservationist of the United States before the committees of the House and Senate.

Has Praise for Mr. Hart.

"For once, in 1914, the birth of the Virginia Game Protective Association, it joined hands and worked side by side with the Audubon Society of Virginia, believing that, although our views differed somewhat from those of the Audubon Society, and knowing that the basic platform of the two associations were not exactly parallel, we could best accomplish the great end in view by working shoulder to shoulder and forgetting our differences of opinion. This we did, and hereby acknowledge with great respect and satisfaction the wonderful work done by Mr. Hart, as an individual, in connection with the campaign of 1914, and no man in Virginia commands my higher admiration, in this particular connection, than does this same Mr. Hart. With this in mind, I am more than amazed that this heretofore fair-minded gentleman should have utterly ignored the great work done by the Virginia Game Protective Association in the campaign mentioned.

I am informed by William Todd, acting president of the Virginia Game and Game Fish Protective Association, that he will shortly call a meeting of his executive board in order to consider the new bill drafted by the Farmington Union, and I feel that in all probability the association will accept favorably upon this bill and leave the matter entirely in the hands of the farmers. I agree with Mr. Hart fully in one particular statement, that he has made, namely, that he is convinced that the country people are the ones to get the game law through the Legislature."
